On the TV side, Netflix this week announced a new slate of programming that will live on the Internet. The partnership with the four other major networks will reportedly feature “three new series — animated comedy “BoJack Horseman” and drama “Sense8” from Sundance Channel, and romantic comedy “Friends From College” from IFC.” “This Netflix Originals series lineup announced today is just the beginning — the Netflix catalog of shows is growing every day. All told, we'll be investing in more than 125 original TV shows for our members in the U.S. and Canada next year,” said Netflix vp content Ted Sarandos in a statement. The move is part of a bigger strategy by Netflix to embrace the user-generated content trend, with “House of Cards,” “Orange Is The New Black,” and the big – and often Emmy-winning – “Gravity” among the series that have drawn on material uploaded by users. On the music side, Spotify this week started offering more songs than ever to its subscription members. Spotify is preparing to spend $1 billion on content. That's the total amount it plans to invest in original content next year. “We want to create and curate the world's greatest music library, to bring choice and access to new artists,” Spotify co-founder and CEO Daniel Ek writes in The New York Times.

"Since 2007, when Spotify launched, it has grown to be a 570a42141b
