“We’re able to use data from the actions of real people and recreate them in gameplay,” said Steve Hilton, Co-Studio Head of FIFA. “It’s the next evolution in football because we can start to manipulate the game on a deeper level, to help them control the ball better, to help them pass the ball better, to do more things in the game.” A new form of player intelligence has been built into every aspect of the game, to add a new level of player-driven game-play. This is made possible by new, intelligent AI technology that enables players to read the game and develop strategies to suit their play style. Smart headers have become a staple of FIFA, and in FIFA 22 they are even smarter. Quick and challenging, Smart Headers grant a defender the ability to not only challenge for a ball but to accurately predict it, ensuring the defender is in the right position to make a successful interception. Individual player attributes, such as speed, strength and dribbling skill, have been given a more realistic representation to better determine player performance. Sprinting has been reworked, for instance, with long sprints requiring a player to make multiple changes of direction to stop and start moving again. Players still make decisions about where to accelerate, however, and this can make the difference between a header ending in a dangerous cross or a harmless clear. FIFA 22 takes a digital approach to player movement, with the ball carried on a unique “FIFA Foot” each time it’s touched by a player. This allows greater accuracy, particularly in defensive maneuvers such as tackles and interceptions, and has also led to the introduction of an award-winning Ultimate Team mini-game, in which players challenge each other on a UEFA Champions League pitch to see who can dribble past their opponent first. FIFA 22 will feature revamped dribbling and goal-scoring mechanics, incorporating the Dribble Control System, Goalkeeper Intelligence and Player Control, previously available in FIFA Ultimate Team, into FIFA Live Events and all FIFA modes. The game is built around the FIFA-Elite concept: a combination of chemistry, training and well-being that provides players with the foundation to fulfill their dreams. Players will now not only rely on themselves but on each other to rise to the highest level of success. FIFA 22 will be available on Xbox One, PlayStation 4, PC
