This new "HyperMotion" will be made more effective in FIFA 22, and it introduces a brand-new animation system that puts players and players' actions on a brand new platform, create a whole new experience that matches the high speed of modern day football while revolutionising the way players run and move. This new animation system makes it possible to combine animation elements that previously were viewed as separate parts of the body into a single seamless blend with fluid movement that combines running, jumping, dashing and tackling in new ways. "With FIFA 22 we're using motion capture data from real-life players which allows us to create player models that have complete animations when they're at the top of their game," said Jordan Molendijk, Gameplay Engineer. "And this data allows us to define a unique playing style for each player based on their personality and on their style of play." While new motion capture technology is used to create more realistic movements, the visuals of FIFA 22 are also being improved. As well as a full suite of new features like the HyperDrive and Dynamic DNA, all new game animations have been recreated with in-engine physics. All across the pitch, including goalkeepers, defenders, midfielders and attackers, player models have been enhanced to give more fluid, realistic movements. The addition of new close-up player models allows for visual fidelity in tackling. But the improvements don't stop there. "Dynamic DNA" technology has been integrated across the player models, creating 100s of animations that are driven by the real-life movements of a player's body," said Ian Morris, Senior Creative Director on FIFA. "With Dynamic DNA, the player is no longer limited to a few pre-defined animations for movement in and out of the game. The unique animations of each player present now represent what he or she can do in the game, rather than what has been programmed." As the data from a real-life player is collected, no direct contact is made with the player and everything created is based on data collected from their movement. You can learn more about the new motion capture technology in FIFA 22 via the following video, played live at the EA SPORTS FIFA 19 press conference.

Free Fifa 22

FIFA is the world's leading videogame franchise and is the best-selling sports videogame franchise of all time. Player interest and demand continues to grow as the franchise stands for all that is great about the beautiful game of football and continues to break new ground in terms of gameplay innovation and entertainment. FIFA is back in a big way. Why are we doing this? With today's ever-changing and expanding digital landscapes, FIFA has evolved into a genuine social hub where players meet, connect, share and discuss the sport. The EA SPORTS Social platform now features EA Sports' FIFA specialists, including editor-in-chief Simon Hollingshead and FIFA Head of Community Marco 'Phizix' Reiser, as well as a host of other FIFA personalities. Players can now connect with their favourite people in a community that is filled with FIFA content and ideas and the ability to interact with their friends and the wider world. Searching for that perfect, classic Camaro? Chevrolet's latest concept car is here to help. The automaker created the H2 Camaro Concept to "highlight the evolution of the iconic Chevrolet Camaro." This year marks 50 years since the model was first unveiled at the New York International Auto Show in 1968. With a decidedly old-school vibe and a real-life production potential of about 40,000 cars, it's one of the carmaker's rare crowd-pleasers. That's how we'd describe the H2 Camaro Concept. Our panel of automotive critics concurs. Get our top stories in your inbox each day. The exterior is classic vintage-style as can be. The H2 represents a time-honored Camaro styling, with the metal panels nearly flowing into the curvy, functional rear door. Chevy's designers have kept the car within the current family of its platform. A large, scalloped rear spoiler sets the car apart from the traditional Camaro. That iconic design element, which dates back to the 1967-1969 model years, is carried over into this concept. A large, tapered taillights complete the rear end. The interior harkens back to the 1960s with a classic Camaro theme and an abundance of classic features. The design for the interior follows that of the all-new 2018 Camaro. Chevrolet is new to the concept car business. We're glad it's here, as much as
