It was part of USRA, successor of the National Workshops. USRA-Stahl-Workshop was a subsidiary of RMVK. It was part of RMVK's Metallwerk Nord-Ost. History In 1954 the foundry was taken over by RMVK's Metallwerk Nord-Ost when the latter closed the large foundry in Lübeck. The foundry was initially used for heavy engineering and shipbuilding. It produced mainly steel castings for the petrochemical industry, as the plant was in close proximity to the gas industry in the port of Lübeck. Up to 1975, the foundry was responsible for several projects in the US, including the construction of the Gerald R. Ford, and the museum ship Charles M. Schulz. Among these projects was the suspension bridge between Lübeck and Gedser, known as the Bering bridge, Germany's first cable-stayed bridge. In 1974 the foundry started production of the URAL 2. It was the world's most powerful gas turbine engine (the output of the unit was about 20 MW) until 1982. It was produced in the USSR, together with the RD-250 and the P&W PW 1000. The foundry, in its capacity as part of RMVK, also supplied turbines to the German turbine industry, including the turbo-ship TF-V 102 built for the Norddeutscher Lloyd and the passenger liner MS Solhull Hibernia for the Royal Caribbean International. The foundry also manufactured the 700 kW steam turbine train turbine (manufacturer: IBM), in Lübeck and Serbin. The foundry closed in the mid-1980s and was dismantled. Products
