Amorous Adventures - Royal Envoy. I would like to speak to someone who understands it a bit more deeply and can explain what's going on. I just installed a 64 bit Windows 7 laptop and installed the 32 bit version of Elite: Dangerous. I can get the main menu and log in and no problems but I get the following error message every time I try to enter the game. "C:\Program Files\My Games\Dangerous Planet 3.0\Bin\windows64\Dangerous Planet 3.0.exe could not be loaded, because the module "ciernel32" could not be found. This file may not work on 64 bit operating systems. I have just acquired Elite: Dangerous, the collectors edition, full game, with all expansions, and all DLC (to date). But after installation, I have been advised to install "Fulcrum_Distant_Hub.rpf" to access the game. However, that was not mentioned in the EULA/User agreement. I have not had a single game update to date, I don't have it on Steam yet, so I don't know how to move the.rpf file into the correct directory, or what is required to access the game. If you do not already have and or use the K-Joy keys for your keyboard, you really should, they work perfectly. After a major upgrade, my system has lost its UAC filter and the K-joy solution works perfectly, giving me UAC on all of my applications, and full access to them. The developers have really made a remarkable effort and I wish them much luck with this and they can, after all, afford to do so! I'd like to start a petition to the publishers and developers to stop putting "PREVIEW" samples in cracked games. I mean, this is a preview because they are demo codes, like the ones that run in the game when you first start it up. It really bothers me that they are doing this. I'm not calling for a crack of the game, but it really takes the fun out of it if you have

The government announced a new measure to protect journalists from violent online attacks on Wednesday, but many internet users were not impressed by its lack of transparency. Defining the "concept of news and opinion in cyberspace", the government launched a consultation to prepare a bill to introduce a new law for the "protection of journalists from violent attacks on their person and against their credibility as a result of their journalistic activities". The consultation closes on June 25 and was a response to the publication of a report by Reporters without Borders on the status of the media in Egypt. "This was a very good step, which proves that the government is concerned about the role of the media in Egypt, and it is doing something about the situation," said a news agency executive, on condition of anonymity. "The government should act quickly and introduce the law before the election, and implement it as soon as the new parliament starts its work in September," he said. The new measure would define exactly what would be considered a "violent attack" and give the government the authority to decide whether the Internet Service Provider must cut off service, or if the attacks should be investigated by security agencies. "The consultation doesn't give enough information on how it will help in improving the security situation," a Facebook user said. "The government doesn't take anyone's word on what is considered a violent attack," he said. "It would be better if they addressed the situation head-on and protected journalists from attacks." More than 60% of the comments on the dialogue were critical, raising the question
